There are many ways your school counselor works with students:

She is helpful to all the girls and boys at Lake Seneca.
She likes to talk to boys and girls about anything that is important to them.
She listens and talks to students about their feelings.
She helps students learn more about themselves and each other.
She helps students get along with others and solve problems.
She works with students alone, in a small group, or in the classroom.
She helps groups to listen, learn, and grow together.
She helps students do their best!

Some topics students may talk to their counselor about:
feeling good in their new school
making and keeping friends making good choices
accepting changes in their family feeling better about themselves being a better student getting along with brothers and sisters understanding grief and loss

How your counselor helps parents and teachers:

She talks to them about how students are doing in school.
She helps them understand so they can help students feel and do their best.
She discusses with them how students are adjusting to new situations.
She talks to them about how students are getting along with classmates.
She discusses how they can help students with their school work and homework.
She helps them find resources and services for families in the school in the community.

How can students and parents talk to Dr. Jones?

- They can leave a note in her mailbox outside her office door or in the main office.
